DEDICATED TO
THE OFFICERS AND MEN OF
MARINE AIR CONTROL SQUADRON EIGHT,
WHO WITH THEIR UNWAVERING SPIRIT
AND UNIT PRIDE,
MADE THIS CRUISE A SUCCESS.

MARINE AIR CONTROL SQUADRON EIGHT
FIRST MARINE AIRCRAFT WING

FAR EAST CRUISE

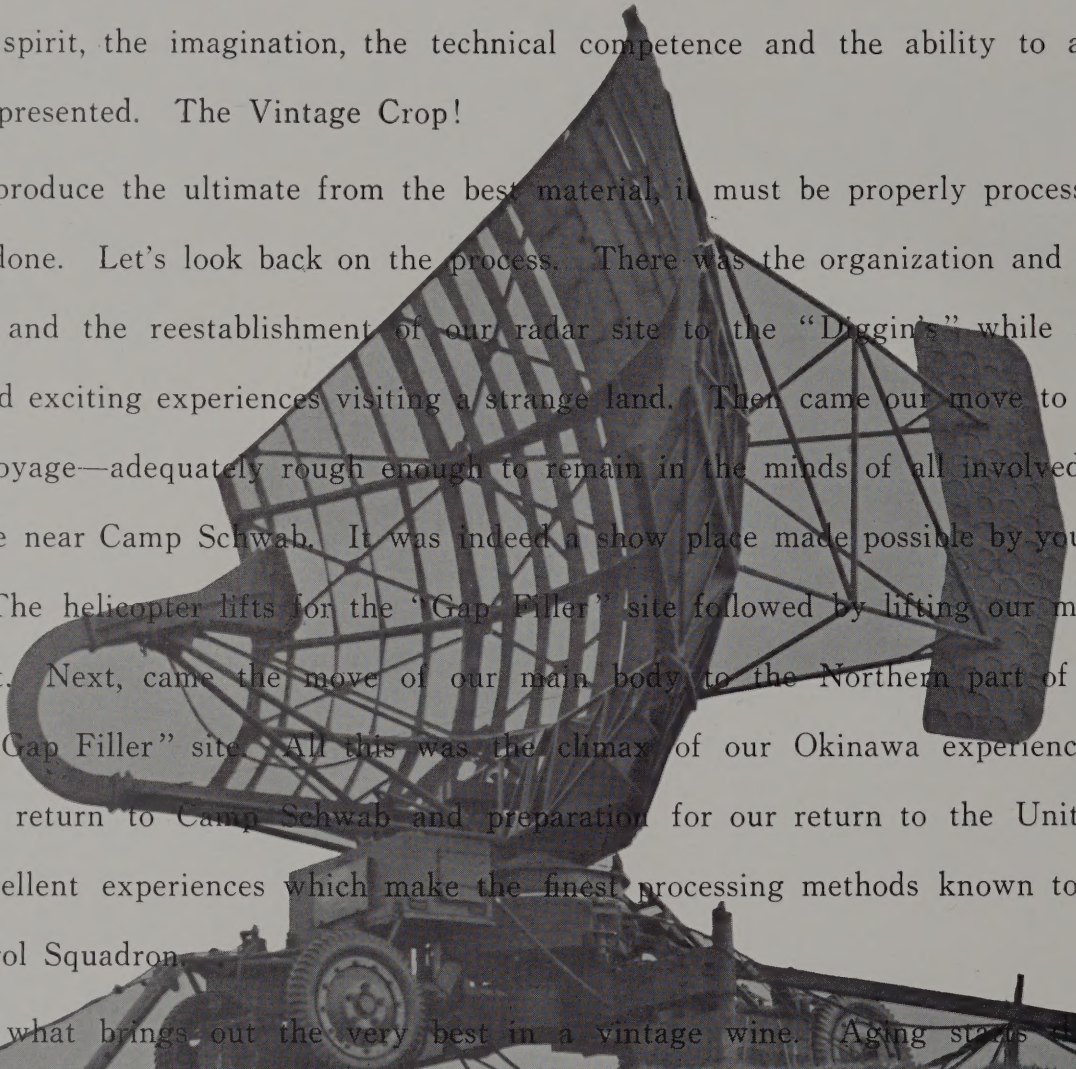

MAY 1964—MAY 1965

To the Officers and Men of Marine Air Control Squadron Eight :

The objectives of a cruise book are to revive and perpetuate in the minds of all personnel involved, the memories of the accomplishments in which we all participated, both major feats and minor, and to restore the comradeship of old buddies and acquaintances.

Cruise books are comparable to a great wine. First, you must start with a vintage year in order to obtain the finest product. Gentlemen, we have in this Squadron the very best of the basic material. I can only say that in my twenty-two years in the Marine Corps I have never had the pleasure of serving with a finer group of Marines. You have the "can-do" spirit, the imagination, the technical competence and the ability to accomplish any task presented. The Vintage Crop!

Next, to produce the ultimate from the best material, it must be properly processed. This we have done. Let's look back on the process. There was the organization and movement to Japan and the reestablishment of our radar site to the "Diggins" while at Atsugi. Happy and exciting experiences visiting a strange land. Then came our move to Okinawa; the sea voyage—adequately rough enough to remain in the minds of all involved. Setting up the site near Camp Schwab. It was indeed a show place made possible by your untiring efforts. The helicopter lifts for the "Gap Filler" site followed by lifting our main search equipment. Next, came the move of our main body to the Northern part of Okinawa; another "Gap Filler" site. All this was the climax of our Okinawa experiences. Then came the return to Camp Schwab and preparation for our return to the United States. Many excellent experiences which make the finest processing methods known to a Marine Air Control Squadron.

Aging is what brings out the very best in a vintage wine. Aging starts the day we depart from the Squadron and brings out the essence as the years go by until, later in life, we will begin to sip the "Vintage Year" as we leaf through the pages of this Cruise Book. Gentlemen; God speed and my very best wishes of Good Luck in your new assignments and careers, to which I can only add—Thank you for an excellent job well done.

A. B. Lench

COMMANDING OFFICER

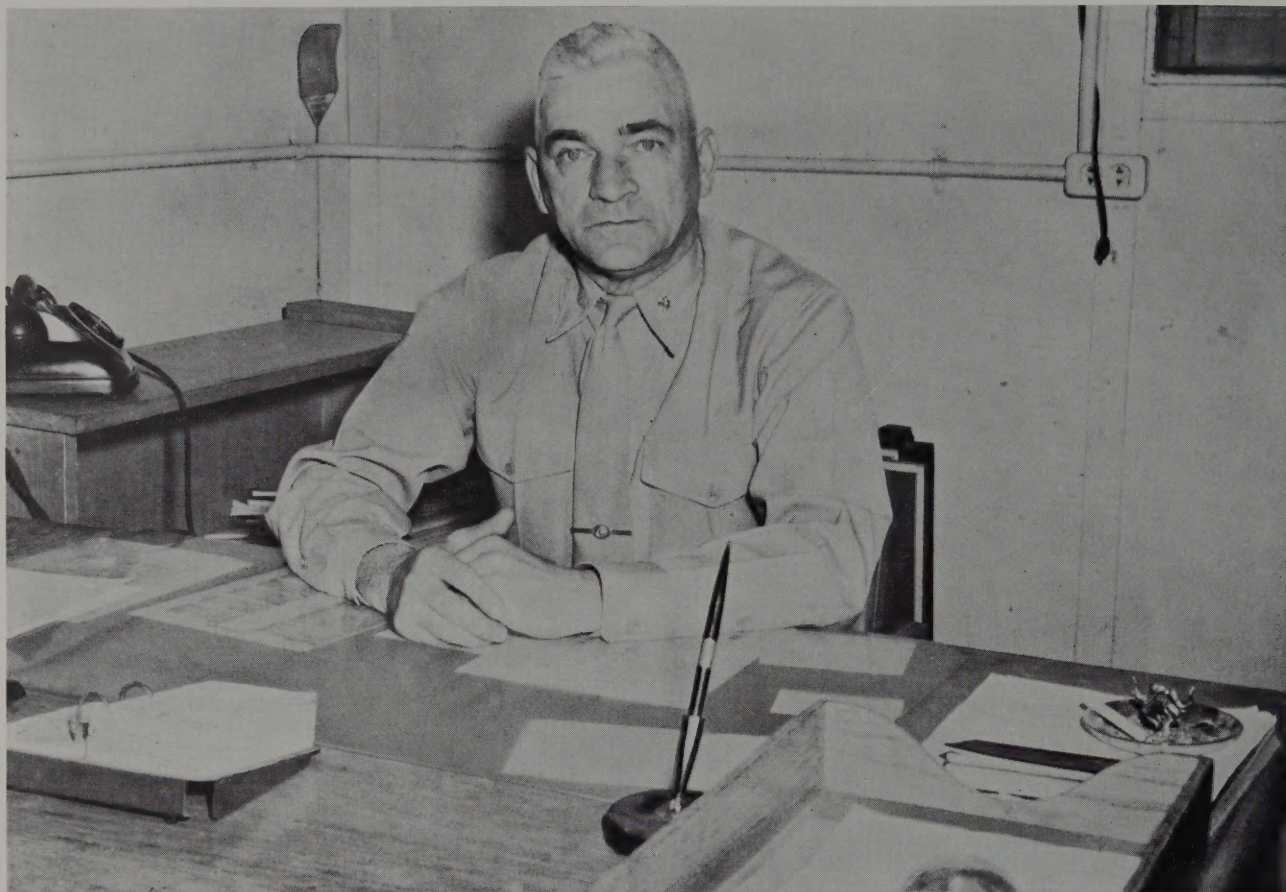

LIEUTENANT COLONEL ALLEN R. SEMB

"They have written a new and shining page in the annals of the United States Marine Corps." With these words Admiral NIMITZ described the combined gallantry of all officers and men who participated in one of the famous battles of W.W. II in the South Pacific. To these same shining pages referred to above, Lt. Col. Allen R. SEMB and the units with which he served contributed significantly in similar fashion by their deeds and actions. Having entered the Marine Corps in September 1942 via the Aviation Cadet Program, he no sooner had received his commission and wings than he was off to the South Pacific. There, as a young Corsair pilot serving with VMF-212 and VMF-222, he participated in aerial assaults against Japanese forces on Rabaul, New Britain and the Philippines during a period from June 1944 to March 1945. With the outbreak of the Korean Conflict in 1951, he was again off to war. Serving with VMF (AW)-513 and flying radar-equipped Corsairs, he participated in numerous aerial assaults against the enemy forces. Among his decorations are the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal with two gold stars and two Presidential Unit Citations.

This splendid combat record was just one of the many attributes which Lt. Col. SEMB brought to MACS-8 when he assumed command in August 1963. For one, he has during the post-war years achieved qualification in almost every type of aircraft, fixed wing and helo, conventional and jet, which has seen service in the Marine Corps. His latest and proudest achievement in this regard was his solo flight in September 1964 in the F4B Phantom II. More significant, however, is the experience he acquired from the numerous staff assignments he has had throughout his many years of Marine Corps service. Most noteworthy among these were tours as Assistant Operations Officer of MAG-15, Assistant G-4 to Commander of Marine Air Bases East, and Marine Liaison Officer to Commander Fleet Air Western Pacific. Lt. Col. SEMB's educational attainments include a Bachelor of Science Degree from the University of Maryland and graduation from Command and Staff School, MCS, Quantico.

EXECUTIVE OFFICER

MAJOR PAUL E. SHEA

Major Paul E. SHEA joined the Marine Corps in August 1942. Upon completion of recruit training at Parris Island and Navigator's School shortly thereafter, he departed for the South Pacific. In the course of his nineteen month tour there as an enlisted transport-aircraft navigator, he participated in the campaigns of the Southern Solomons, Munda, Vella-Lavella and Bougainville. During this period he rose to the grade of Master Sergeant.

After World War II he continued as a navigator, seeing service with almost every Marine Transport Squadron and traveling over most of the globe.

In May 1951, shortly after the outbreak of the Korean War, the then Master Sergeant SHEA was commissioned a Second Lieutenant and assigned to duty with the Marine Air Control System. During subsequent service with MACS-1 in Korea from March 1952 to April 1953, Lieutenant SHEA was awarded the Bronze Star.

Major SHEA was promoted to his present rank on 1 July 1961. In addition to the Bronze Star, among his many other decorations are the Presidential Unit Citation, the Navy Unit Citation, and the Good Conduct Medal.

In April 1961 Major SHEA took the reins of MACS-8, then in its infancy. From that day forward, whether guiding the unit as Commanding Officer as he did from April to November of 1961 and again from March to August of 1963, or serving in his present position as Executive Officer, few men have come to better know their unit or to be better known and respected by it than Major SHEA. And few units are so fortunate to have the breadth of experience, wisdom and devotion to duty that he has brought to MACS-8.

SERGEANT MAJOR

SERGEANT MAJOR RAYMOND L. GENTRY

A distinguished Marine Corps historian, in commenting on "the intangible" which, in his opinion, above all other factors accounted for the Marines' successful taking of Mt. Suribachi in World War II wrote: "What it was, mainly, was esprit de Corps—the conviction that a Marine is distinct and different, that a Marine is a better soldier than either his Armed Forces teammates or his enemies, and that a Marine will die before he lets down his fellow Marines or his cherished Corps." It is this intangible which has guided Sgt. Maj. GENTRY to the summit of the enlisted ranks and which he, in turn, brought to MACS-8 in October 1961 and which he labors daily, by word and action, to instill in the men of MACS-8.

Sgt. Maj. GENTRY entered the Marine Corps in California in February 1941. With the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor occurring shortly after his completion of recruit training, he was assigned to Co. "K", 3rd Bn, 22nd Marines and departed in early 1942 for the South Pacific. Remaining in that theater until his return to the U.S. in 1944 for hospitalization for malaria, he participated in the campaigns for Guadalcanal, Eniwetok and Guam. In 1948, at the completion of tours ashore and at sea, he was transferred to Parris Island for duty as a drill instructor. Upon completion of his tour there in 1951 at the outset of the Korean War, he had produced an enviable number of nine honor platoons and had risen to become Chief Drill Instructor to the 1st Recruit Training Battalion. Seeing service in Korea with the 5th Marines, he participated in the winter offensive of 1951 and the spring and summer offensives of 1952 which took place in such areas as Vegas, and the Hook, to mention but a few.

Sgt. Maj. GENTRY's decorations include the Navy Unit Commendation and the good conduct Medal with five stars.
